A: Many trade associations maintain industry statistics and share the aggregated data with members. Collection of historical data by an independent third party, such as a trade association, that is then shared or reported on an aggregated basis is unlikely to raise competitive issues. Other factors can also reduce the antitrust risk.

The international trade show is one of the most powerful tools in presenting products to new audiences and markets. Though there are now a few trickles of life in Asia, Europe, and the U.S., the trillion-dollar worldwide industry is, for the most part, still on hold. This past July, Richard Paullin of The International Trade Show Association of Greater Chicago invited Larry
